ABOUT OUR TOPIC....(Presented in English)

This topic is of interest to those interested in the management of human resources in these challenging times, especially HR leaders, HR strategic advisers, human resources planners, learning specialists and operational managers.

Retention of competent employees is a strategic concern for any organization. Statistics say that one out of every two employees in your organization is either actively looking or passively considering different, and potentially more attractive, job opportunities. So what is a manager to do? Anita will explore the factors that cause a person to want to stay and perform, and equip you with the actions you can take on the job to retain them.

ABOUT OUR PRESENTER

After many years of being employed in high tech, government and the hospital industries, Anita walked her talk and decided to pursue the career of her dreams. Today she is professional speaker and a member of the management training teams at Learning Tree International and the Professional Development program at Carleton University. She is the author of the book "Promote Yourself" and co-author of "Learn to Bounce: from a high-tech layoff to your ideal work."

Anita Caputo boosts business performance, and inspires confidence, enthusiasm and passion in those she serves. She has a unique ability to energize and motivate professionals to take action and to be more effective in their work. She uses her strategic "big picture thinking" and thought provoking style to empower the professionals she coaches to explore options and to take action.
